Business Management Workshops Help Small and Midsize Contractors Grow While Benefiting Charity

CFO on the go will offer three workshops that teach best practices for construction accounting and estimating with all registration fees being donated to local food banks.

Temecula, California – October 21, 2009 – CFO on the go (<http://www.cfosonthego.net>), a Sage Timberline Office and Sage Master Builder reseller, has announced three business management workshops designed for small and midsize contractors and construction firms. The workshops, which will teach best practices for construction accounting and estimating, will also benefit area community services, with all registration fees being donated to local food banks in California, Nevada, Arizona, and Colorado. These workshops will be delivered over the web and each one is presented in two separate 2-hour sessions.

Presenters include Jim Cumming and CFO on the go founder Dennis Feidner, both construction industry veterans and experts in helping contractors of all sizes grow and prosper. According to Feidner, “We’re sharing important knowledge gained from years of helping small contractors get a handle on best practices for construction accounting, estimating, and project management. In the process, we’re also doing something good for our local communities.”

Workshop attendees will learn about tools and best practices for job cost accounting, field reporting techniques, cost analysis, and reading financial reports to measure the success of individual projects and the overall business. They’ll also learn valuable techniques for estimating, assessing feasibility and risk, and responding to RFPs.

“Many of our clients have been in the construction industry for years, building businesses from scratch.” Feidner elaborates, “But in a tough environment like we’re seeing now, it takes more than mastery of the craft to win new business and thrive. You also have to master business management principles like construction accounting, estimating and bidding, and cost-effective marketing. We’re using proven methods to show small contractors how to achieve greater success in their business.”

The workshops will begin in November 2009 and run through early 2010. Workshop dates, fees and other details can be found online at:
